Archbishop Richard Robinson founded a Library in the heart of the City of Armagh in 1771. The collections include around 46,000 printed works. Many of the Library's treasures are on display, such as Medieval manuscripts, incunabula (books printed before 1501), Archbishop Beresford's archaeological collection, and Jonathan Swift's own copy of Gulliver's Travels with notes in Swift's own handwriting. No 5 Vicar's Hill was built in 1772 and houses rare survivals of eighteenth century fine art include James Tassie's 'gems' from the 1770s. Tassie reproduced classical figures in a hard-setting sulphur paste. Collectors of his 'gems' included Russia's Catherine the Great, while Louis XIV of France commissioned medals to commemorate his reign. In addition, a number of Hogarth's satirical engravings from the Library's internationally important print collection are on display.
